

On The Ball Tutors – In Schools

We work with schools in the UK in 3 different ways...

After School Classes: Online

The main aim of our online classes is to provide an affordable alternative to conventional private tuition, which can be very expensive, in a way students enjoy.

Our main operation consists of daily online classes for students taught by our trusted and vetted tutors.

Tuition takes place in small groups within our online academy and students have the option of logging in with their computer, tablet, or mobile phone.

After submitting an application, our team of experts match the child to the tutor that is best suited to meet the child's needs.

Students simply need to click on their tutor and the time indicated.

After School Classes: In Schools

We also go into schools after the school day is done and administer classes.

Students are taught in small groups.

Firstly, we introduce, define and structure the learning group taking into consideration:

- Students cognitive processes
- Interpersonal group dynamics
- Students Experiential processes
- Student physical surroundings

We see dialogue and collaboration within the group as key to building students confidence in the subject.

Online Academy Setup for Schools

Alternatively, some schools have asked for us to set up classes on their behalf to allow their teachers to teach live online lessons –

I.e. An online academy for the school

We provide this service, which includes:

- Online academy formation
- Online class setup for each teacher
- Manuals for teachers on how:
 - The software works
 - To setup passwords
 - To login to classes
 - How students enter the online class
 - Best practices for teaching online
- Instruction for students on how to login to their online class.

Our Research

Extra tuition in small groups, and in particular the work we do to familiarise techniques for the tests, will help the vast majority of students. The problem is the availability of tutors at a level parents can afford and finding a tutor who can keep up with the ever-changing syllabus from year to year.

Many parents tell us that they have tried helping their children themselves, however, it can become very stressful (with many parents working varying hours from week to week) and some have joined our live online lesson because their methods conflict with how the students are taught in school.

We carried out a straw poll and found parents who have hired private tutors before turning to On The Ball Tutors said tutors charged anything from £15 to £20 an hour for tuition, which is at least 25% more than our BASIC plan (where students get 1 class per week) and 56% more than our ULTIMATE plan (which gives students 4 classes per week).

A Growing Trend – Sutton Trust

A survey of 2,700 11 to 16-year-olds by the education charity the Sutton Trust reveals that nearly a quarter (23%) have received some form of private tuition. The figure compares to just 18% four years ago.

“While it is natural that parents should want to do the best for their children, it does give well-off families an advantage – particularly when money to help children from poorer homes is being cut.”

There was a wide gap between the percentage of children from the most affluent homes (25%) who received out of hours coaching and the percentage from the least well-off families (15 %). Some of these may have had coaching paid for by their local authority.

A breakdown of the figures show that parents in Greater London are the most likely to resort to private tuition for their children – 38% said they had opted for it compared with 34% in 2005.

Asian and black parents were also much more likely to hire private tutors, according to the survey, with 42% of Asian children and 38% of black children said they had received help. Only 20% of white families had resorted to private tuition.

The children were asked why they had received private tuition. More than half (57%) said it was “to help me do well in a particular exam” while 42% said it was “to help with my school work in general”.
